Southeast Center for Photography in Greenville, SC, Features College Student Art Exhibit

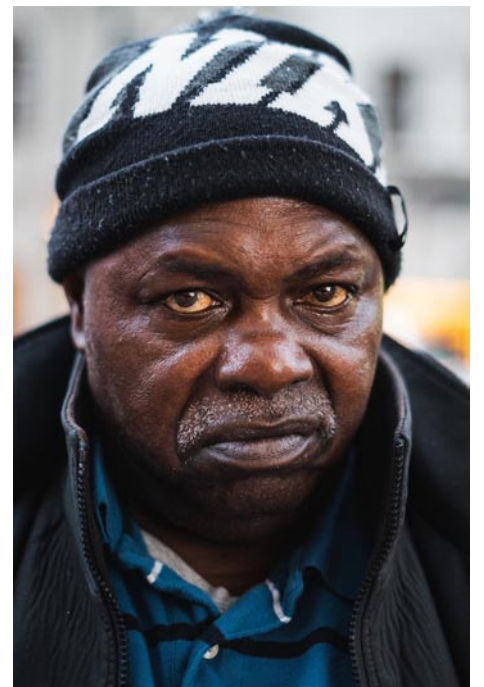

The work of seven Furman University students will be on display Apr. 5 - 27, 2019, at downtown Greenville's Southeast Center for Photography. A reception will be held on Apr. 5, from 6-8pm.

For the center's first college exhibition, over 525 images from institutions in 10 Upstate counties were considered. Of the 24 students selected to exhibit in the gallery, seven are from Furman.

"Exhibiting work at the Southeast Center for Photography is quite an honor - it's one of the best exhibition spaces in Greenville," said Furman Associate Professor of Art Terri Bright. "Entering a juried exhibition is always a humbling experience because you never know what the juror is looking for. In this case, the quality of student work was quite high, so I'm extremely proud of these photography students."

The College Call was organized by Michael Pannier, director of the Southeast Center for Photography. Students from colleges in Greenville, Spartanburg, Anderson, Pickens, Oconee, Greenwood, Laurens, Cherokee, Union, and Abbeville counties were invited to submit up to 10 images, photography or photo-based art. The submissions were reviewed by juror Zane Logan, a photography instructor at the Fine Arts Center in Greenville.

After that, it's too late unless your exhibit runs into the next month. But don't wait for the last minute - send your info now.
