in the Upfront Gallery in his exhibition Figurative Works. He has chosen the work with care from pieces he has created over the past decade. Connecting figure study with its long history in art, Jiang delved into drawing and painting the human form because he had not yet mastered it in his professional training.

Jiang's work coincides with a national rise in interest in the past decade of strengthening the ability to classically represent the human form, resulting in realist ateliers, including that of Stephen Early, based in Philadelphia, PA, at the Studio Incamminati, and Robert Liberace, based in Alexandria, VA. Both Early and Liberace will visit Artspace to teach workshops in 2013.

Artspace and Jiang both host live figure drawing sessions on a regular basis. Artspace hosts life drawing every Tuesday night from 7:30 to 10pm. Jiang hosts it at his studio, the Village Art Circle, in downtown Cary, each Monday from 12:30 to 3:30pm. For more info, visit (www.villageartcircle.com).

Jiang was born in China, and trained as an architect and architectural historian with professional degrees from both the US and China. He practiced architecture and taught architectural design and history. He is a signature member of the Watercolor Society of North Carolina and is a juried member of Artspace Artists Association in Raleigh. Jiang currently resides both in Cary and Oriental, NC, the state he regards as full of natural wonders and inspiration.

Regional Emerging Artist-in-Residence (REAR) Nsenga Knight will exhibit her work in a solo exhibition, Ritual and Revolution, as a conclusion of her six-month residency at Artspace. This concept-driven artist explores abstraction and conceptual art in a range of media as they inform and coincide with traditional Islamic Art. Knight is interested in how Muslim art and culture can be misrepresented and misunderstood in Western culture, and she uses photography, drawing, painting, performance and video to explore the ways.

Knight's work explores concepts including unity in multiplicity, repetition, and transformation of forms. An identical twin, Knight developed an interest in multiples that appear similar but have distinctions. The seriality expresses itself with systems, like those made historic by Conceptual American artist Sol Lewitt (1928 - 2007).

Knight used her residency to continue working on her Last Rite project, which is "an interdisciplinary visual art project whose narrative pivots between Malcom X's pilgrimage to Mecca in 1964 (his fulfillment of his last religious duty) and his funeral rites - the final ritual regarding his physical presence on earth."

In a series of new drawings, Knight stencils words excerpted from the book Hajj (The Pilgrimage) by Dr. Ali Shariati. She layers the quotes and produces each set in a series of four, painted in oil stick and mixed media. The order of text, and direction it is written in, follows a system. One layer is top to bottom, left to right, with every other line going upside down; another layer is in a circular direction. In one series of four, the first layer of text is painted in white, and the next layer in black; in another series, the first layer is black, the next layer white. In one evocative iteration, the first layer is black, and the next layer is done with olive oil, so the stenciled letters are partially transparent and take some of the black oil paint from the first layer of words.

Among the quotes are "as a butterfly who encircles the candle until it burns, its ashes are gone with the wind, disappearing in love and dying in light." Whether the words quote the Koran itself or Shariati's text, the language demonstrates the complexity and beauty inherent in Islamic culture, and ways in which contemporary visual art can help others learn more about it.

Knight has a MFA in Photography and Cinema Studies from the University of Pennsylvania and a BA in Film Production from Howard University. Her recent exhibitions include The First Year, Galveston Arts Center, Galveston, TX, Muslim Voices of Philadelphia, International House, Phila-

Gallery C in Raleigh, NC, Presents Exhibit Focused on Coffee

Gallery C and Café Helios in Raleigh, NC, will present Hot and Steamy, the Art of Coffee, on view from Aug. 2 through Sept. 4, 2013. A reception will be held on Aug. 2, from 6-9pm.

We at Gallery C have noticed that our friends, our children and even our senior parents are hanging out in coffee houses. This is representative of a major shift in American culture and we have asked some of our favorite artists to go to their local coffee shop to find inspiration. This concept show will feature paintings of friends sharing a "cup of Joe", show outdoor cafes full of coffee drinkers and still-life's with cups, bottles and coffee pots.

We are partnering with Café Helios, our own local neighborhood coffee house to bring you this special exhibition. They will be here for our opening reception on Friday, Aug. 2, serving coffee in its simplest form as well as featuring some tasty specialty coffee drinks.

Gallery C is located in Downtown Raleigh on the corner of Blount Street and Peace Street in Blount Street Commons and there is plenty of free parking.

FRANK Gallery in Chapel Hill, NC, Offers Exhibit Focused on Animals

The FRANK Gallery in Chapel Hill, NC, is presenting Animals: Forces of Nature, on view through Sept. 10, 2013.

The guiding idea behind the show is to celebrate and honor the animals in our homes and in nature and to bestow on them the dignity, respect, appreciation and love they deserve. This show was juried by FRANK artists Nerys Levy and Sudie Rakusin and will feature works by local and regional guest artists, as well as FRANK member and consigning artists. Animals will focus on all creatures, with work from artists in a variety of media and styles.

Work by Lisa Goldstein

FRANK's events and Thursday evening salons during the exhibition will focus on dogs - their roles in our lives, adoption, training and indispensability as service animals. Thursday, August 1st, Jen Merritt of K9 Kindness, and famed local author and photographer John Rosenthal join together at FRANK on a common theme of respecting and honoring our canine companions. ing reward based (pain free) alternatives to dog training techniques and collars designed to hurt, startle, and punish. Merritt and her dog will be presenting these techniques. John Rosenthal will follow her program with a reading of his essay Sharing History, With Rufus. In addition to his being a photographer, Rosenthal was a regular commentator on the national NPR program "All Things Considered" as well as local NPR programs, and has published numerous essays in art publications.

The mission of the Franklin Street Arts Collective is to support the arts community of Chapel Hill and the region, strengthen community appreciation of the arts through educational outreach, and promote Chapel Hill and North Carolina as a major arts destination. FRANK is a 501(c)3 nonprofit art gallery

Work by Maureen Cummins

Cummins released a new limited edition artist book, Accounting, in 2012. In it, she incorporated antique business ledgers into many of the works to connect human accounts with financial ones. She uses this framework to tell stories about oppressive economic systems with original, first-person testimonies.

Cummins' artist books are strongly influenced by her interest in books, history, and the social construction of knowledge. She often works with found printed matter, making use of original photographs, documents, and everyday ephemera to create new meanings. In her words, "I employ beauty—in the form of sensuous material, compelling imagery, and centuries-old craft techniques—to draw the reader/viewer in to histories that are painful and difficult."

While at Artspace, Cummins will work on a new, limited-edition book, entitled Bestiary that will explore the relationship between "autistic" and "artistic." The book will incorporate, with her own words, drawings and collages, drawings and stories by her son Quinn, who is on the autism spectrum. Bestiary will also investigate the experience of being viewed as different, strange, or exotic.

Cummins graduated from Cooper Union, New York, NY, with a BFA in 1985. She has produced over 30 book editions and has worked from California to the Eastern Arctic. She received a Pollock-Krasner grant in 2009, the Pyramid Atlantic Book Fair Critics Award in 2008 for Anatomy of Insanity, and received a special opportunity grant from the New York State Council of the Arts to study with Master Binder Daniel Kelm in 2007. Her experience with teaching and working residencies is international and deep, and Artspace is thrilled to host her this summer.
